Israelis Offer Talks On Beirut Departure

By David K. Shipler

New York Times Service

JERUSALEM — Israel proposed Friday to the United States that Israeli and Lehanese army officers meet to work out the gradual transfer of positions in West Beirut from Israeli to Lehanese

The suggestion followed Thursday night's cabinet decision that the fsraeli Army would withdraw from Beirut only when the Lebanese Army was ready to move in. Israeli officials predicted that once the Lebanese agreed, the transfer would take at least several days, since the Lebanese Army has sbown timidity about entering West Beirut.

The proposal for a meeting was made by Defense Minister Ariel Sharon and Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir during talks in Jerusalem with Morris Draper, a LIS cracial environment bes her and the state of the state o U.S. special envoy who has been traveling between Israel and Lebanoa since the assassination of Lehanon's president-elect, Bashir

Gemayel, on Tuesday.

Mr. Draper declined to answer reporters' questions after he left the talks. But Israeli officials present at the meeting said that the Americans seemed sarisfied, Mr. Draper was scheduled to fly to Beirut to present the proposal to Lehanese officials.

Milder Private Stance

President Ronald Reagan, in his first direct comment on the fs-raeli move into West Beirut, called co all foreign forces to leave Lebaaon and predicted that the Lehanese Army would take over the Israeli positions, The Associated Press reported from White House Station, New Jersey. "We want to see all foreign forces removed and see Lebanon go forward once again in control of its own destiny, and I'm sure that's what Israel wants also," the president told Reoublicans at a fund-raising recepioc Friday.]

A well-placed Israeli official said that the U.S. view, as expressed privately, was considera-bly less demanding of Israel than the public statement Thursday accusing Israel of violating the agreement under which the Palestine Liberation Organization was evacuated from West Beirut. In public, the United States demanded an immediate Israeli withdrawal from the sector. "We were surprised and angry" at the statement, the official said, since it came only hours after a much more "understanding" U.S. line had been presented by Mr. Draper

The State Department issued an unusual statement Friday that gave additional details of the dispute with Israel, Reuters reported from Washington. It said that the administration has decided not to seek written pledges on what Israel Beirut, "in light of the many previous oral assurances we had ob-

The Israeli conviction is that the United States made the tough statement because of "Arab pressure," as an official put it.

PARIS — A bomh hlew up an Israeli diplomatic car here Friday, critically wounding at least five persons, including an official of the Israeli Embassy's military purchasing annex, and injuring at least 40 children from a nearby school.

The blast shook the Rue Cardinet, in the 17th district, shattering windows and creating panic on the crowded sidewalks and inside the Lycee Carnot. The device exploded near the purchasing annex, police said. The annex is on Boulevard Malesherbes.

The Israeli diplomat was identified only as Amos Man-El, a member of the Israeli purchasing mission in Paris. Embassy officials said he was in critical condition, and that three of his relatives were seriously wounded. Two young passers-by were seriously in-

Joseph Franceschi, secretary of state for public security, said the police believed that the bomb was placed under the right fender of the car and exploded when the driver turned oo the ignition.

Bonn Coalition Falls; Schmidt Seeks Vote

By James M. Markham New York Times Service

BONN — The coalition that has governed West Germany for the past 13 years collapsed Friday as the junior Free Democrats pulled their four ministers out of the government, and Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, in a dramatic speech to parliament, challenged the opposi-tion to agree to hold new elections.

Rebutfing the chancellor's pro-posal for elections, Helmut Kohl, the leader of the conservative Christian Democrats, vowed instead that his party would put to-gether a new government — evi-dently with the Free Democrats and then face the voters. Hans-Dietrich Genscher, the leader of the Free Democrats and former foreign minister, made a similar Climating weeks of open bicker-ing between the Social Democrats and the Free Democrats over ecoand the Free Democrats over eco-nomic and foreign policy, the breakup of the coalition left Mr. Schmidt in charge of a minority government and opened a period of uncertainty in West German politics as Mr. Kohl and Mr. Genscher bargained over the cahi-net they propose to form.

The end of the coalition came early Friday when, alerted to Mr. Schmidt's plan to address the Bun-destag, Mr. Genscher and the three other Free Democrats in the cabinet - Peonomics Minister Otto Lambsdorff, Interior Minister Gerbart Baum and Agriculture Minister Josef Ertl — resigned.

With the four cabinet chairs empty, Mr. Schmidt, in a vigorous address to the Bundestag, blamed Mr. Genscher and the Free Democrats for destroying the coalition and accused his opponents of indulging in "intrigues."

Because I take my responsibility seriously, I refuse to watch these said Mr. Schmidt, who has been chancellor for eight years. "For us Social Democrats, the reputation and solidity of democracy is more important than tactical party ad-

To end the country's political impasse, Mr. Schmidt proposed an all-party agreement to dissolve the Bundestag — a difficult procedure under the constitution — through confidence vote that be would agree to lose. If the opposition agreed not to put forward a candidate of its own in the 21-day waiting period stipulated by the constitution, Mr. Schmidt said, elections could be held at the end of November. Bitterly taunting the Free Democrats, whose popularity has dropped radically in the past year, Mr. Schmidt said that in new elections they would not be able to campaign with posters showing him and Mr. Genscher as they did in 1980. Riding Mr. Schmidt's coattails, the Free Democrats polled a record 10.6 percent of the

"Now you are going to have to pay the mortgage for your mistak-en decisions," he said, turning to the Free Democrat beoches in the Bundestag "I only hope that you will be good debtors."

A poll below 5 percent might have kept them in the government, he suggested. "But I percent more or I per-cent less in Wiesbaden is no basis a federal government," clared the chancellor to applause from the Social Democrat henches. But for I percent more. I have al-

Clergy, in Stern Message to Regime, Warns of Threat to Poland's Future

Washington Past Service

WARSAW - Warning of possible tragedy, Poland's Roman Catholic bishops sharply criticized the martial law authorities Friday for failing to take adequate steps toward national reconciliation.

A statement issued after a twoday meeting here of the Polish episcopate that included Poland's primate, Archhishop Jozef Glemp, expressed concern at what was de-scribed as "the multiple crises shaking Poland" and the lack of dialogue between the government and the suspended Solidarity trade

The bishops condemned the beatings and arrests of Solidarity supporters by riot police during nationwide demonstrations at the end of Angust.

The statement was one of the most forthright to be issued by Poland's Roman Catholic Church since the imposition of martial law in December. It appeared to reflect the fear of church leaders that social tensions within the country could become unmanageable if if the present political stalemate is allowed to continue.

The government spokesmen have ruled out negotiations with interned Solidarity leaders, including Lech Walesa. Instead, the anthorities have sought to launch "a Patriotic Movement for National Rebirth" in which some lay Catholics have been invited to partici-

But Friday's episcopate statement makes clear that the bishops do not regard the National Rebirth movement as an adequate substitute for the restoration of independent unions.

The episcopate statement said the bishops were filled with con-cern for the future of the country and the lack of any significant signs of improvement in the social nation. In a reference to street demonstrations on Aug. 31 that were broken up by not police, the bishops warned: "The growing tide of violent events could assume a harmful, even tragic direction for the existence of our people and

This phrase was interpreted as a reference to an extreme, but plausible scenario for future developments in Poland. According to this scenario, prolonged civil strife could result in a Soviet invasion if the Polish authorities turn out to be incapable of maintaining order with their own internal forces.

So far the riot police, known as ZOMO, have been able to deal with the demonstrations. But after the recent disturbances in which firearms were used to disperse demonstrators on at least two seperate occasions, church leaders obviously fear that there could be an escalation of violence on either

The bishops' statement said:

that the great majority of society expects a agreement and reconciliation and workers want their own independent organizations: trade unions including Solidarity and Rural Solidarity. University stu-dents also wait for their own independent organizations."

Turning to the street distur-bances, the bishops said it was their duty to defend people who had been "beaten, wounded, morally humiliated, deprived of their freedom, or subjected to various sentences and high fines." The church has recently been criticized by the government for allowing collections of money to assist people convicted of offenses under martial law.

Condemning the use of violence by cither side," the bishops said they had prepared a special memorandom that they were forwarding to government leaders. The contents of the memorandum were not disclosed.

■ Solidarity Activist Surrenders Juliusz Cezary Baginski, a Solidarity activist who had been in hiding since martial law was proclaimed, has surrendered to police, the Associated Press quoted the Polish news agency PAP as reporting Friday.

PAP said Mr. Baginski, a member of the Solidarity leadership in Jelenia Gora, southwestern Poland, reported to local police headquarters and was released "after a talk."

Development Efforts Failing in Black Africa

Los Angeles Times Service TORONTO - The dramatic foreign deht crises of such countries as Mexico and Argentina have obscured another persistent economic problem of the Third World — almost complete failure of development in black Africa after two decades of effort.

While most of the world's finance minis-ters and top bankers fretted over the Third World's foreign debt problems at the annual meeting here last week of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, statistics were quietly published that showed a woeful and frustrating record of development in Africa since the breakup of colonialism there in the 1960s. Economists predicted that the situation might worsen in the 1980s. Ousmane Seck, finance minister of Senegal, in a little-noted speech, called on "the international community to assist African countries in an effort to arrest this trend. which is intolerable and, in fact, dangerous to the stability of the region."

Speaking on behalf of all African finance ministers. Mr. Seck said Africa needs international agreements to stop the continuing decline in prices for African commodities, a halt in the growing trend of industrialized countries toward barring imports, a new World Bank institution to help Third World countries search for energy supplies and an increase in foreign aid. According to the annual World Development Report of the World Bank, made publie just before the meetings, nine African countries actually showed a decline io gross a country's economic activity - in the 1960s and 1970s: Chad, Mozambique, Uganda, Niger, Madagascar, Sudan, Ghana, Senegal and Angola, In eight others, the average annual increase in GNP per capita was less than 1 percent: Upper Volta, Zaire, Guinea, Central African Republic, Benin, Zamhia, Zimbalan and Cappa. Zimbabwe and Congo.

In short, in more than half of the countries in Africa, the average person found his economic plight either worse or only slightly better than at the time of independence in

In only two African countries, tiny Lesotho and oil-exporting Nigeria, were the growth rates for the past two decades higher than average for the Third World.

'Mixed Blessing' The World Bank predicted that the 20 poorest countries in Africa — those with a GNP of less than $410 per person per year — will have an increase in per capita growth during the 1980s of, at best, one tenth of 1 percent a year. At worst, the bank said, these countries would experience a decline of 1 percent a year. For all the other African countries except Nigeria, the bank's forecast was only slightly better. percent a year. At worst, the bank said, these

Some of the reasons for Africa's economic problems were outlined by the bank in a separate report published a year ago and distributed again at this year's meeting. The report has been widely criticized in Africa because it tends to put a good deal of the responsibility for Africa's troubles on its failure to de-velop rural areas. Some African officials in-sist that external factors — high oil prices and low prices for African exports, for exam--should be considered more.

The World Bank report said Africa came to independence in the 1960s with "a scarrity of trained manpower." Internal politics also hurt economic growth. "In the wake of independence," the bank said, "violent internal conflicts burst forth in many of the new na-

Other problems included the fact that modern economic development came to most African colonies only after World War II. The experience was new. In addition, the enervating tropical climate and enormous population growth, stemming partly from remarkable progress in health care, also made development difficult.
On top of this, Africa was burt by two external factors that it could do nothing about: Oil prices soared at a time when the world recession caused a drop in the prices that Africa was getting for exports such as

If the security experts who pene-trated one of the three reactors at the South Carolina facility where all the plutonium and triti-um for U.S. nuclear weapons is produced — had been terrorists intent on sabotage, they could have triggered an accident that might have led to a meltdown, sources said Thursday.

The three large reactors at Savannah River, moreover, were huilt in the early 1950s, and are not shielded by the domed second-

Sources who attended the Sept. Il classified congressional briefing said members of the assessment teams described in some detail the manner in which they infiltrated the Savannah River plant.

They gained entry to the 300-square-mile (780-square-kilometer) reservation simply by turning off a public highway that bisects the plant, sources said.

They subsequently passed through checkpoints within the reservation, the sources said, by using forged credentials.

Sources who attended the hriefing said one of the major problems in security at all of the govern-ment's weapons facilities appeared to be the belief that an attack mounted by terrorists using so-phisticated infiltration and commando techoiques simply "couldn't happen in America."

Push Into Beirut Stirs Fears of Deeper Israeli Political Involvement

By David K. Shipler New York Times Service JERUSALEM - When the Israelis entered Lebanon on June 6, the question immediately arose as to how they would eventually manage to get out. Now that they have moved deeply into West Beirut and more deeply into Lebanon's morass of internal factionalism, the question has grown more urgent and more troublesome.

Never before has Israel sought so ambitiously to translate its military power into political might.

NEWS ANALYSIS

Never have the leaders in Jerusalem moved so directly to influence the internal political makeup of a neighboring Arab state. Never before have they taken control of an Arab capital And never has an Israeli victory in a war seemed so dubious.

Despite Prime Minister Menachem Begin's insistence that Israel desires not one inch of Lebanese territory, despite his pledge to withdraw as and when the Syrians withdraw, there is a growing dread, reflected in the Israeli press and in the private comments of ordinary people, that the best army in the Middle East has stepped into a quagmire, and that the exit will not be easy or early.

Strong Government Sought

Mr. Begin is a skillful politician in the Israeli arena, and his de-fense minister, Ariel Sharon, may be one of the most effective military minds in the world today. In Bashir Gemay-el. the 34-year-old Christian Phalangist leader who was to assume the presidency on Sept. 23, the Israeli leaders felt they had a man ruthless enough to rule and indebted enough to Israel — for years of clandestine military aid to sign a peace treaty and provide security guarantees along the Israeli-Lebanese border.

But there was little sensitivity in Jerusalem to the delicate task that Mr. Gemayel faced in building bridges to the Lebanese Moslems, and to his need to put some dis-tance between himself and the Israelis, at least until he had governed for a while.

Mr. Begin showed some awareness of this when be said in an interview on Aug. 27 that he was oot impatient about a peace treaty. But 10 days later, Mr. Sharon warned bluntly that Lebanon would "certainly be territorially united" only if a Lebanese government signed a treaty with Israel.

Otherwise, he said, a 25-mile (40-kilometer) deep zone from the Israeli border northward would be placed in "a special status." This was taken to mean control by Isra-el or its surrogate, the Lebanese Major Saad Haddad.

This threat of partition hangs over Lebanon even more ominously after Mr. Gemayel's assassina-tion. There is oo indication that the murder, and the fragility of government that it has demonstrated, have induced Israel to lower its ambitions or pare down its

But the very fact of the Israelis' control of the capital is an influence itself, for it creates the impression, probably correctly, that a kind of Israeli veto exists, that if a new president hostile to Israel is elected by the parliament, the troops will not leave southern Lebanon and the country will remain divided into Syrian- and Israelicontrolled sectors.

That prospect has stirred profound concern among Israelis themselves. The Tel Aviv oewspaper Ha'aretz said Thursday that the army's move "arouses the suspicion that Israel intends to hold onto West Beirut for who knows how long." The paper continued:

Several ministers were reportedly distressed that the move into West Beirut was decided upon in a midnight telephone conversation between Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Mr. Sharon, without wider consultation in the cabinet.

But when it came time for the vote, even the dissenters felt they should present a united front. Indeed, there is a widespread perception in government circles that everyone involved — the Leb-

When the PLO withdrew from the city, Mr. Begin and other offi-cials have said, they left behind about 2,000 guerrillas with arms caches ready to reorganize and take advantage of any disorder. The Commerce Department's efforts coincide with fresh diplomatic moves to resolve the dispute. Officials here and in Brussels said that Secretary of State George P. Shultz would meet in New York later this month with his counterparts from Britain, France, West Germany and Italy at the start of the new session of the United Nations General Assembly, and that the pipeline dispute would be the major topic.

Even though only four companies have been directly affected by the sanctions, the fortunes of many. companies are bound up with those on the sanctions list through joint ventures and supplier rela-

The sanctions were levied against the four companies for shipping to the Soviet Union com-pressors built with U.S. technology for use in pumping gas along the 3,700-mile (5,920-kilometer) pipeline now under construction.

The sanctions mean that American oil and gas equipment or technology cannot be shipped to the four companies: John Brown Ltd. of Britain; Dresser France, a subsidiary of Dresser Industries of Dal-las, Creusot-Loire of France and Nuovo Pignone of Italy.
Initially, the sanctions barred any U.S. company or any Europe-an company using U.S. technology under license from receiving ex-ports of U.S. goods and services if they sold equipment to the Soviet Union for construction of the pipeline. But the Reagan adminis-tration later limited the sanctionsto exports involving oil and gas.

Since the denial orders were imposed, the Commerce Department has made these decisions: • It told the Rockwell International Corp. that the regulations did oot apply to Rockwell's Freoch subsidiary, Rockwell Valves, even though Rockwell valves are used in the compressors that Dresser France shipped to the Soviet Union Aug. 26.

• It made a preliminary ruling exempting Walter Kidde, a British subsidiary of Kidde Inc. of Clifton, New Jersey, from sanctions even though it makes firefighting equipment for use at pumping stations along the pipeline. It made another preliminary ruling execupting Andrew Antennas, a British subsidiary of the Andrew Corp. of Orland Park, Illinois, from the sanctions even though it provides microwave equipment that is part of the communications complex for the pipe-

The ripple effects of the sanctions already imposed are beginning to be felt by Dresser, the one U.S. company directly involved. Edward R. Luter, a Dresser semior vice president, reported that the company's French subsidiary had been stricken from the bidding lists of several international engineering companies, which he de-clined to name, because of the ban OH its access to U.S. oil and gas technology.

"The denial order is a serious threat to the viability of Dresser France," he commented, "since American oil and gas technology is its lifeblood.

El Salvador, With U.S. Support, Begins 'Dialogue' With Guerrillas

By Bernard Weinraub New York Times Service

SAN SALVADOR - The Salvadoran government, with the quiet support of the Reagan administration, has begun an indirect "dialogue" with guernilla leaders in-tended to end the civil war. Western diplomats said Thursday that interest in talks had increased after a secret meeting Sept. 3 in San Salvador between the provisional president, Alvaro Ma-gaña, and the Costa Rican foreign minister, Fernando Volio, to discuss peace negotiations between government and guerrilla

Mr. Volio's trip to the capital came after Costa Rica's president, Luis Alberto Monge, met in Costa Rica with Guillermo Manuel Ungo, head of the Democratic Revolutionary Front, the political arm of the leftist-led guernillas. In an interview last weekend,

Mr. Magaña denied he was study-ing proposels from the guerrillas, who are grouped together in the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Army. But he said he hoped to establish a multiparty commis-sion before the end of September to take up the question of whether to open peace negotiations.

Angered at Speech

Amid indications that the United States is pressing for negotia-tions, Salvadoran rightists have reacted angrily to a speech by a senior State Department official last month in San Francisco urging "reconciliation" between warring oups in El Salvador and other Central American nations. The rightists viewed the speech by Thomas O. Enders, assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, as marking a shift by the Reagan administration in seeking accommodation with leftist forces in the region. Perhaps even more surprising, the speech characterized U.S. policy in the region as a virtual continuation of Carter administration actions.

In the first public reaction to the Enders speech, El Diario de Hoy, a conservative newspaper, said Wednesday that Mr. Enders had a "simplistic view" of Central America and was "out of date" in his understanding of the region.

"If it weren't because it was given by an influential figure in the Reagan administration," the newspaper said of the speech, "we would be tempted to believe it was the working of some confused left-ist or some Third World priest." U.S. officials in San Salvador said the speech marked a shift the Reagan administration as they were under President Jimmy Carter, although activists in San-Salvador compiling statistics on violence against civilians deny this.

U.S. officials say efforts to spur talks are highly delicate, partly because opposition to a "dialogue has been voiced by powerful rightists, some ranking army officers and key members of the Salvadoran guerrilla insurgency. But of-ficials maintain that the Salvadoran left has softened some of its

Guatemala Army Tied To Terror Campaign

By Marlise Simons New York Times Service
LAS PACAYAS, Guatemala —

It was just before dawn when Pedro Gualin heard the shooting, grabbed his hunting rifle and ran. From the foliage nearby, he watched helplessly as strangers in civilian clothes fired wildly into the village buts and set them on fire.

When it was all over, he said, he found his wife, Marcela, dead on the floor. At least 60 other men, women and children in this Pokomehi mountain village were also dead.

Of the 300 survivors who fled to nearby San Cristobal, many told townspeople that the army had come to kill them on June 11 and that they would never sleep in Las Pacayas again.

This incident has joined the many tales of death in Guatema-la's central highlands, where the war between leftist-led guerrillas and the army rages across a vast expanse of mountains, ravines and jungle.

Reports of clashes and massa-rescore from villages often mac-cessible by road. With the two sides in the conflict issuing contra-dictory bulletins and wearing civilian clothes as well as green uni-forms, it is difficult for outsiders to verify who is winning the war or who is to blame for the massacres.

But a reconstruction of the incident at Las Pacayas through nnmerous interviews with survivors, military officers, health workers and community leaders in a nearhy town has confirmed that the strangers who attacked the peasant huts at dawn were soldiers assigned to the military base at Coban, 12 miles (19 kilometers) away.

The regime of General José
Efrain Rios Montt, which seized power five months ago, is carrying out a methodical counterinsurgen-cy program. Since a state of siege was imposed July 1, government forces have been sweeping across the western and central highlands.

The war is waged largely against the Mayan Indians, many of whom are supporters or members of the guerrilla groups that have worked to about 200 a month from about people were killed in June.

With the press silenced now, the army put the July figure at 452.

These sources have usually offered conservative estimates.

The new government's efforts to present a better image of itself to the world have been complicated by continuing reports of massacres in which many of the dead are women and children. Invariably the army blames the Church groups monitoring human-rights abuses contend that the guerrillas are responsible for many deaths, but they say that the rebels generally target individuals identified as enemies rather than

Government, Church Clash on Human Rights

By Jackson Diehl

Washington Past Service
SANTIAGO — The impending expulsion from Chile of eight government critics, including four human-rights activists, has triggered a new confrontation between the authoritarian government of General Augusto Pinoches and the Roman Catholic Church as well as social movements here.

In one of the most aggressive actions against dissident leaders in recent years, the government has obtained a judicial sentence of expulsion against two directors of the Chilean Human Rights Commission and two leaders of the Justice and Peace rights group. The four were accused, along with lour others, of violating a ban on political activity by organizing for the Christian Left, a political party. The human-rights activists have denied the charges, and all eight have disputed the government's case on the ground that the evidence against them was obtained after they were arrested by the Chilean secret police and held in a prison. Five of the men say they were nortured and forced to sign denied charges of torture, have responded that the case shows that human-rights organizations, and ostensibly apolitical social movements are being used by leftist activists to oppose the government. As debate over the case has increased, officials have expanded this charge of leftist infiltration to include Chile's Catholic Church, the traditional leader of rights activism since General Pinochet's coup in 1973.

Last month, General Fernando Paredes, the head-of Chile's national police investigation department charged that agents of the Soviet Union had turned leaders of the church into "allies of the

The conflicts and charges come at a time when the Pinochet gov-criment, plagued by severe eco-nomic problems, is facing wide-spread social unrest and sharp public criticism on other counts. These organizations have carried out such tasks as assisting families of political prisoners and docu-menting alleged rights violations and have tried the government by expanding into organizing commu-nity movements and working with the poor and unemployed.

The conflict over the groups' activity and the Chilean govern-ment's rights record have taken on particular importance as the Reagan administration considers whether to certify to Congress that the Pinochet administration has improved its performance on human rights. The administra-tion's voucher is necessary before military and economic aid suspended by the Carter administration in 1977 can be resumed.

francs, the pair would have been dearly paid. At 2,494 francs, it became something of a mystery.

Yet, this was nothing compared with the portrait of a young girl inscribed in the name of Paul Mignon and dated 1897. The artist's name is not entered in any of the great biographical dictionaries of painters, draftsmen and engravers, so that it is difficult to check facts, but the paintings struck me as distinctly later — the '30s of this should have thought.

Could this have been, who knows, n fake Paul Mignon?

Two ladies of some age obviously thought differently. A random bid was made at 1,100 by a third lady who did not seem too sure about her own keenness. Seconds later, the third lady found an object for her thirst for collectibles. It was a mechanical reproduction of a drawing, laid down on board, varnished, and described precisely in those unflattering terms by the auctioneer. She raised her finger with great determination, and got the piece for 242 francs, probably 20 times what it is worth. Objets d'art went exactly the same way. who catered to the French upper middle class around study of some Gothic church towers. It hardly seemed overpriced at 348 francs. Nor did a most interesting drawing about 20 by 16 inches in watercolor heightened with gouache of a medieval street in Rouen. The gable-ended houses, which were all razed in the 1944 bombing, were represented in great architectural detail with a skillful handling of light effects. Judging from the costumes, the drawing is datable to the 1840s. Some foring in the sky, probably caused by the acid board on which the drawing is laid down, is hard if not impossible to restore. But this does not affect the documentary value, which is considerable und is hardly disturbing aesthetically. At 296 francs, this too seems reasonable.

Some objets d'art were equally inexpensive. One lot onvisted of two flat eigarette cases in silver-plated metal. The style of the early '30s, with its taste for abstract geometries, was excellent and at 139 frames the two objets, in perfect condition, were hardly overpriced.

Higher Price Bracket

In a considerably higher price bracket, a so called "gar-niture de cheminee," i.e. a chimney piece clock and assort-ed candlesticks made en suite around 1860-70, was again not expensive. The rococo-style ormolu with its ruisted soliage was a bit on the beavy side, as in all the objets d'art of the Napoleon III period, but the chiselwork was good. The very large pieces are of a type that has avidly been sought in recent years largely for export to the United States, South America, and the Gulf area. At just over 20,000 francs, it sold moderately well - the final price when it reaches its ultimate destination might be closer to 60,000-80,000 francs. At any rate this would have been so

This is not to suggest that there has been a drop in demand for the better quality works of art. But the dealers who stock such pieces belong to a cetegory that is sufficiently well-informed to dread the effects of the current recession. Their abstention beyond a certain limit may be read as an anticipation of worsening conditions. It is for comparable reasons that the good watercolor of a medi-eval street in Rouen sold for so little; dealers who sell 19th-century drawings, again, belong to a better educated category than those who might go after a common faience water jug. Small-time dealers are scared of holding onto their devalued cash while their sophisticated colleagues dread a deflationary situation and longer-term fall in demand. Hence the discrepancy between the wildly expensive trash and the rather low-priced better items.

monochromatic painters of the 17th century are forever guilty in suggesting to subsequent centuries that good art is dark art, "In the 14th and 15th centuries and before, the colors of paintings were as vivid and violent as the times," says Thomas Schneider, an independent Florentine restorer who rates as "excellent" the job done on the "Primavera." Until the 1930s, he says, many paintings were coated with brown varnish to give them an air of authentic age; the English actually called it "gallery tone."

The 'Patins' Argument

A more moderate argument is the one against restoration beyond careful conservation. The value of a work of art is not only its beauty but also its age, the fact that it has survived so long. To remove the patina of time, this argument goes, is to remove the soul or immortali-ty of beauty. It is all the more convincing when restoration is admit-tedly subjective and interpretive. The difficulty, says Schneider, is deciding what is "pauna." Is it varnish, discolored pigment or just purity you found the more you avenged yourself, seeking filth, and pain and vulgarity as n punishment. . . . But is it enough to "The real trouble is that restorabelieve in love and not to believe tion is not scientific enough," says Maurizio Seracini, who did the scientific studies of the "Primavera." His photographs, which are on dis-play, give a fascinating fourth dithose great inventories of sexual li-berality and wit: the "Decam-eron," the "Canterbury Tales" and the "1001 Nights" rendered as brumension to Botucelli by showing how the artist actually painted.

"Rarely does anyone study the microclimate from which art in need of restoration has emerged and to which it will return." Seracini says. "What is restoration if it's not long-term conservation? Is it just a show? Maybe this exhibition will finally show Italians that scientists have a role in art. Otherwise what we'll have in another 100 years will be 20 more books on Botticelli and five fewer paintings him."

Botucelli also had an idea of perfection. It was such that the newly visible flowers in the restored "Primavera" --- when stud-ied by a University of Florence botanist, Guido Moggi - were found to be real Tuscan spring species growing today in the old Medici villa at Castello, where the painting hung for so many years. Yet, those daisies, violets and irises are painted upright and intact in spite of the eight harbingers of spring dancing on them.

"Don't ask me why some of those flowers are not painted squashed," Moggi says. "Those are philosophers' questions."

The Met's Changing Style

By John Rockwell New York Times Service

NEW YORK — The Metropolitan Opera that opens its season Monday night with Kiri Te Kanawa, Tanana Troyanos, Judith Blegen, Kurt Moll and Luciano Pavarotu in "Der Rosenkavalier" is, in a basic sense, the same old Metropolitan Opera it's been for one year short of a century. It is the United States' international opera company, the repository for the proven masterpieces of the operatic repertory and the home for the best singers it can attract.

But the old Met is also the new Met. The Met's newness can be measured in many ways. One is the shift in artistic leadership from Rudolf Bing to the interregnum of Goeran Gentele and Schuyler Chaplin to the "troika" of Anthony Bliss, James Levine and John Dexter to what amounts, now, to a new troiks of Rliss. Levine and Joan Ingpen, the British assistant manager in charge of casting.

Another form of measurement would be the style of productions the Met now offers, less opulent but more dramatically considered than they used to be. Another would be singing - not simply, as some old-timers grumble, fewer "stars," but a different kind of star. One could also add a new emphasis on depth of ensemble and the preservation of that ensemble, and on the dramatic and musical values achieved in rebearsal, over the course of a season's run.

But perhaps the most striking way to describe what is different about the new Met is to consider its reper-

Until the 1970s, the Met was known primarily as a singers' house, an aviary for what Ingpen refers to as "canary fanciers." But singers have to have something to sing, and the Mer's repertory under Bing was weighted beavily toward warborse operas of the German and, especially, Italian schools. Bing can be credited for his innovations, chiefly then-rarely-played operas by Verdi and occasional landmark productions, such as his opening-night "Don Carlo" in 1950 and the Eugene Berman "Don Giovanni" that, although falling apart, still graces the Met repertory. Typical Bing Season

A look at a typical Bing season — 1959-60 — reveals some interesting similarities and dissimilari-ties from the Met's forthcoming 1982-83 season. The number of operas presented - 23 in 1959-60; 22 this season — is comparable, although the earlier season was one month shorter. The proportion of operas by Italian and German composers was similar, too, bely ing the widespread assumption that the current regime has de-emphasized the Italian warhorses: 10 Italian and nine German in 1959-60; 11 Italian and seven German in 1982-83. But there are differences between the two seasons.

as well. In Bing's day, the repertory was based on the standard repertory to a stalinitying extent. In 1959-60, operas like "Madama Butterfly," "Aida," "Cormen," "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "Pagliacci" recurred throughout the season, filling in gaps that needed to be filled. Casts shuffled in and out of these operas in a way that does not suggest an overriding concern for coherence: in 1959-60, for the 11 performances of 'Aida," there were eight different Amonasros.

Today, there are still many repetitions of popular operas --- more than ever, reflecting the longer season. This year there will be 16 "Barbers of Seville," 13 "La Bohemes" and 13 "Il Trovatores."

hackneved operas and established works not previously done at the Met. Along with the "Bohemes" and "Trovatores," there will be 13 performances this season of Mozart's "Idomeneo" -- one of the three new productions — and an opera never before done at the Met, as well as a revival of the company's triple bill of Satie's "Parade," Poulenc's "Les Mamelles de Tiresias" and Ravel's "L'Enfant et les Sortileges.

The new regime at the Met took power in 1974.
Levine says that he and bis associates "bad a clear-cut dea of how we intended to expand the repertory." Those plans included the introduction of "20th-century classics," commissions and new productions of standard works, and works Levine thought should be standard. Plans for the next three seasons include new productions of Handel's "Rinaldo," Zandonai's "Francesca da Rimini," Mozart's "La Clemenza di Tito," Mussorgsky's "Khovanshchina" and, tentauvely, Gershwin's "Porgy and Bess" and the first of the company's two centennial commissions, an opera based on the Medea theme by Jacob Druckman.

Repertory at the Met today is planned by Levine and Ingpen. Bliss, as general manager, holds final veto power, but claims not to intrude his own artistic opinions into the process.

Talk of a Second Theater

The Met will never become an experimental bouse: its position as a guardian of the standard repertory as well as the sheer size of its 4,000-seat hall preclude that. There is still talk of a smaller, second theater for more experimental or intimate works and productions, but that will not come until the late '80s at the earliest, after the $100 million endowment drive is completed and the next round of labor talks, in 1984.

But the new Met remains actively interested in less familiar, nonexperimental operas, and one reason is the kind of singer available today, particularly in the United States, who is comfortable in a wide range of repertory and willing to take part in a closely knit ensemble that remains a unit throughout the run of an opera. Add to that the necessity for starker, less expensive productions, and the Met's choice of repertory becomes partly determined by the need to find operas that fulfill those conditions. Better to do Poulenc's "Dialogues of the Carmelites," which can sustain an austere production and doesn't invoke nostalgia, than an undercast "Aida."

American opera companies have long been conervative in comparison to Europe's - luggen places the taste lag at 20 years. That can have its advantages, Levine adds — the avoidance of "fad productions that are thrown away in six months." But the lag also means that Europe's own interest in new repertory can have a ripple effect on the Met. Thus, famous singers are now more willing to sing unusual operas, and the Met is more willing to accommodate them. The choice is first of all, Levine stresses, based on the work itself. But aside from the inherent value of an opera like "Khovanshchina," for instance, Ingpen points out that it is being planned in part because Martti Talvela wants to sing it.

Such wishes can't always be fulfilled, however. If an opera relies too beavily on one singer, the Met may be unwilling to risk a new production. The company has a production of Bellini's "I Puritani" in the warehouse. But Joan Sutherland doesn't want to sing it ohemes" and 13 "Il Trovatores."

But there has been a steady shift, too, toward less er of similar stature to warrant a revival.

Grace, the Real Thing

One way to estimate an American's age is whether he calls the beautiful blonde who died this week Grace Kelly or Princess Grace. If the former, he is old enough to remember the McCarthy investigations, liking Ike, the suburban dream and the remarkable sangiroid of a young woman swamped by re-porters as she sailed to Europe to marry a prince. When one of them asked if she spoke French, she replied, "Comme ci, comme ca" - as always, giving the public no more than she thought it proper for it to know.

At the time she was a film star, but already of so queenly a mien that it seemed lese majesté when a presenter called her "Gracie" during the Academy Awards ceremony at which she was honored for "The Country Girl." The title she acquired by marriage. "Her Serene Highness," suited her as well as the "It Girl" and the "Oomph Girl" had suit-

Grace Kelly the actress would have enchanted Henry James the novelist. The young American he sent to Europe. Daisy Miller, was as much a victim of New World gaucherie as of malaria. But the Old World doesn't appear to have fazed this grandchild of poor immigrants. Miss Kelly was a far more credible royal than most royalty, like the Cockney model in another Henry James story, "The Real Thing," who posed a far more convincing aristocrat for a painter than the society woman he had first hired.

If a profoundly democratic society like ours was proud that an American became a much-publicized princess, it is not because Americans are closet monarchists. Instead it is because Americans think this particular princess was best of class.

U.S. Military Spending

For the second time in recent weeks, the Reagan administration has run up against congressional resistance to additional Pentagon spending. Last week the president was defeated in a request for a $2-billion increase for the rest of this fiscal year when Congress overrode his veto of the supplemental appropriations hill. This week the argument is over administration resistance to 1983 military spending limits set in the hudget process.

From the perspective of Senate Republican leaders, much more is at stake than the defense hudget itself. There is, of course, room for doubt that the administration's military strategy is so finely honed that a few billion dollars can be crucial to its success. Nor has the administration made a case that any particular cut cannot be tolerated. But the issue that has given pause to so staunch an administration supporter as Sen. Ted Stevens, chairman of the Appropriations subcommit-tee on defense, is whether the administration is a reliable partner in congressional efforts to control the budget.

The hudget resolution that Congress and the administration signed off on last June called for trimming several billion dollars from the amount the president wanted for defense in 1983. This year Congress put very strict controls on the appropriations committees to make sure that the bills written for each program area stayed within the limits of the hudget resolution. The final allocation agreements for each committee were made public in late July.

On Aug. 3, OMB Director David Stockman told the Senate Budget Committee that the administration not only agreed to those allocations — including defense — but would use them as the benchmark against which to judge whether the president should veto an appropriations bill. Now the administration claims that it did not understand the implications of the allocations, and Defense Secretary Weinberger has refused to supply a plan to meet the lower target.

The administration apparently hopes that by taking a hard line with Congress - which has always found it hard to deal with the defense hudget in other than pork-barrel terms - it will win out in the rush to keep the government operating while Congress ad-journs to prepare for the November elections. Senate leaders, however, have good reason to push for a compromise that conforms with both the spirit and the letter of the budget resolution. If the agreement on military spending is violated, control over congressional decisions in other parts of the bu will be greatly weakened. Congress will also have relinquished the only real leverage it has to persuade the administration to develop a coherent strategy for improving America's defenses without imposing intolerable strains nn the federal hudget.

Bashir Gemayel Is Gone

Among the sinister news items of which this year has been so full, here is perhaps the worst. Not that Bashir Gemayel was a saint come down from some stained glass window to provoke our tears with his virtue. He was first of all, like most Lebanese politicians, a clan leader and not especially squeamish as to the methods he used. But it happens that this fighter also had a political brain. He had understood that if he was to become president of Lebanon he would have to be president of the Lebanese, and not only of the country's Maronite Christians — who, furthermore, are more deeply divided than is self elected by representatives of all the country's religious communities.

One began to hope again. Evacuation of West Beirut was carried out without the slightest incident. The Israelis drew back their tanks. The Lebanese Army reappeared. With that ardor for life the instant the fire storm ends that they share with the inhabitants of volcanic regions, the people of the capital began clearing the ruins with the help of bulldozers rushed in from Saudi Arabia.

After so many years of civil war, many people had despaired of Lebanon. Still, for some time now, a year perhaps, one had sensed, in the face of so much misery, the rebirth of a national consciousness, a desire to surmount passions, prejudices, hatreds, and restore to the country of the cedar its old role as the Switzerland of the Near East, where Maronite and Orthodox Christians, Shiite and Sunni Moslems, Druze, Jews and Armenians once lived in peace.

Bashir Gemayel, who had a sharp mind, grasped this movement and banked on it. The Israeli invasion, in which he had the wisdom not to let his troops take part, gave him his chance. Scarcely back from hell, many Lebanese, and with them many friends of Lebanon, began to dream: Reconstruction was going to start any minute ...

- André Fontaine in Le Monde.

At the time of his death he was steering a canny course down the middle - between Moslem demands that he repudiate peace with Israel, and Tel Aviv's increasing pres-sure for a piece of paper, signed and sealed. The thread that runs through all Israeli for-

for the possible prize of a united, friendly Lehanon, which might turn out to be neither united nor friendly, why not take what was more easily available — another swipe at the Syrians, knock them back militarily for a few mnre years, and use a large chunk of south-ern Lebanon as a huffer? Now that Bashir is gone, the hand of those who argue in this way will certainly be strengthened.

Calm Beauty, Blithe Elegance

It may be argued that Grace Kelly, whose career on the screen stopped just short of a dozen films, never really left the stage, although she retired from acting when she married and could not be persuaded to return.

"Why should she?" asked Gary Cooper, one of her leading men. "She's moved from the orificial stage as a stage of the stage of th the artificial stage to a real one."

Indeed, her life fascinated, even if its details were brief. Her reputation grew with every movie that she did not make, and, as Her Screne Highness the Princess Grace of Monaco, her polish and charm sustained the image of a fairy-tale marriage. She was not named Grace for nothing. F. Scott Fitzgerald once complained that there are no third acts in American lives: Grace Kelly's life, in fact, contained four: delicate daughter of a hearty Philadelphia Irish family, Hollywood, royal retirement to Monte Carlo, and now her tragic death in an automobile accident at age 52. This is the sort of progress that captures the imagination. We like to believe that a commoner, especially an uncommon one, can be swept off her feet by a prince and live happily ever after. But we know that the tahleau can be shattered as easily as it is painted.
What has Grace Kelly left us? Perhaps most important, a thin but exquisite portfolio of film roles that will beguile and enchant for years to come: her fresh innocence in "High Noon," her alluring humor in "To Catch a Thief," her poignant and unexpected depths of emotion in "The Country Girl," for which she won an Academy Award as best actress in 1955. And an enduring image of calm beauty and hithe elegance.

PARIS - The dispute between Americans and

First, let's disregard all the imputed intentions and look at the facts. The pipeline question started energy resources of its own. The first answer was

There then emerged the danger of overdependence on crude oil. Independence mandated a sub-pendence, France, after a thorough study of the world supply, carefully determined how much gas it could import from the Soviet Union to complete a systematically diversified energy picture. When the program is completed, Soviet gas will account for only 5 percent of France's energy consumption.

Furthermore, technical measures will be imposed so that we can promptly offset an interruption of Soviet supplies. Our European partners have reasoned as we have, and have acted as we have.

Now That Begin Has Had His Way, The PLO Poses a Political Threat

PARIS — There is an old warning that one should be careful for what one prays, since one may get it. Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin had long and fervently prayed for the removal of the military threat posed to his country by the Palestine Liberation Organization. He took energetic steps to see that his prayers would be fulfilled, and so they were. There is no longer a PLO military threat to Israel.

There is now a political threat, of a scale which never before existed. The pope, President Reagan, the presidents of Greece, Italy and France, and other West Europeans all in one or another way have now acknowledged or lent support to the notion that a Palestinian political entity must be recreated. If this happens, it inevitably will be at the expense of Israel, as Israel now exists, or of Israeli security as the government of Israel now conceives of its security.

Moreover, Israel for the first time in its history finds itself roughly treated by the world press, for what has happened in Lebanon and goes on happening. It has been placed on the ensive, and it discovers that a real rift has been opened among its sup-porters in America, many of whom anisance. Its rockets and shells entactics were those of weakness, in default of anything serious to do. The PLO was isolated politically. Until the last few months, the Palestimians' only allies were the Arabs and the Soviet bloc, neither able to give them effective help to gain their goals. The European Community had declared that the Palestinians had a right to a homeland, but this meant little since the Europeans have little to say in the Middle East. The United States refused to consider the Pales-timans as other than refugees with humanitarian claims. But now, thanks to Menachem Be-Sharon, the Palestinian case has been in the headlines for months. The PLO has been enabled to make the claim that it, and it alone, among the Arabs, has successfully stood up to Israeli military attack. The legitimacy of the Palestinians' claim to a homeland in historical Palestine has found earli in instruction rates the last remain explicit or implicit acknowledgment in nearly all the Western capitals. Even the United States, vital to Israel, has now given qualified recognition to the Palestinian claim.

Furthermore, as a direct result of the invasion of Lebanon and its aftermath, the Arab League, at its meeting in Fez, proclaimed every Middle Eastern nation's right to exist in peace—as it never before had been willing to do. This indirect recognition of Israel'a existence grudging and limited as it is undercuts Israel's previous claim that its own intransigence is essential because the Araba

The 1950s in America: A Destructive Prelude

By George F. Will

WASHINGTON — Nostalgia VV can reflect failure of nerve, a flinching from an arduous present. But Jeffrey Hart's new book recalling life in the 1950s —
"When The Going Was Good!" —

is constructive nostalgia.

Hart, an academic who helps edit National Review magazine, counters the view that the '50s tailfins and all that - revealed America's crassness. For the intelligentsia, Ike and America were "the bland leading the bland." For Hart, "Not since the 1920s had so much been happening, both in popular and high culture." Enriching the life of the mind

Enriching the life of the mind were distinguished novelists (Faulkner, Hemingway), poets (Eliot, Frost), theologians (Niebuhr, Tillich) and painters (Hopper, Pollock) who made Manhattan the art capital of the world. "Eisenhower's smile," writes Hart, "was almost a philosophic statement." Some people who wanted to supplement the smile with conservative ideas were casting seeds on stony soil. The em-ing seeds on stony soil. The em-hlematic intellectual of the '50s, Lionel Trilling, had written in "The Liberal Imagination" (1949) that "liberalism is not nnly dnminant but even the sole intellectual tradition." There were, he said, no conservative ideas in circulation.

Television

But in 1953 Russell Kirk published "The Conservative Mind," and in 1955 William F. Buckley Jr. launched the magazine (National Review) that, a quarter century later, was the president's favorite. In October 1951 Lucille Ball beean television's first long-running gan television's first long-running situation comedy. Soon Lucy was, er, "expecting" (CBS hanned the word "pregnant"); 44 million people watched the episode "Lucy Goes to the Hospital" - twice the number who watched Ike being in-suggrated the next day.

In 1953 Hugh Hefner launehed
Playboy. In 1957 Searle pharmacautical company launched Enovid - "the pill." Three books of the '50s - "The Kinsey Report," "Peyton Place" and "Lolita" suggested what was increasingly on America's mind. A Memphis record producer re-peatedly said: "If I could find a Elvis. In 1955 Bill Haley and the Comets recorded "Rock Around the Clock" for the movie "Blackboard Jungle." Rock was lastingly identified with youth unruliness. Like Hart, I was a happy lad in the '50s, which glow in my mem-ory. But Hart does not refute the white man who had a black sound and the hlack feel, I could make a hillion dollars." Then he found accusation that those years were pregnant with the impulses that were to make the '60s so dreadful. Infantilism

In his nicely named final chap-ter, "From the Clock at the Bit-more to LSD," Hart acknowledges that "the great shift in style and emotion" was gestating during the '50s. While we were "meeting un-der the clock," Hart notes, there was a mass market for books andcipating the anxieties of the '60s about the suffocation of individu about the surlocation of individuality and spontaneity by social structures and pressures: David Reisman's "The Lonely Crowd" (1950), C. Wright Mills' "White Collar" (1951), Sloan Wilson's "The Man in the Gray Plannel Suit" (1955), William Whyte's "The Organization Man" (1956). James Dean's portrayal of an

"alienated" teen-ager in "Rebel Without a Cause" (1955) popular-ized the kind of pouting that self-absorbed youths in the '60s confused with politics. Hart rightly erophasizes the vi-tality of the 50s. But perhaps the going was good because the going was easy and standards of good were not demanding. America had unchallengeable military superiori-ty, yet settled for stalemate in Korea. It had an economic head start on a world recovering from war, yet was soon panting.

The infantilism — impatience, hedonism, inability to defer gratification - that produced the cultural dissolution of the '60s helped give rise to the inflation of the 70s. Those failings gathered force in the '50s. Some of that decade's vitality was license — a letting go af-ter so much bearing down in De-pression and war. The great release of energy in the '50s had a destructive dimension, reflecting a col-lapsing capacity for discipline.

Nixon on Détente

Regarding "The Case For 'Hard-headed' Detente" (IHT, Aug. 23): Former President Richard Nixon writes that he strengthened his hand with the Russians by ordering the bombing and mining of Haiphong in North Vietnam, on the eve of his first summit meeting with Mr. Brezhnev. #### On the Philippines The IHT has of late been publishing reports on the Philippines that are inaccurate, tendentious, baseless or create false impressions of the actual situation in the country.

One describes the Philippines as if it were on the verge of civil war. The sporadic disturbances caused by the local Communists do not at all constitute a threat to the stability of the government. President Marcos characterized the leaders of this group as upstarts out to make noise just to gain recognition. The isolated forays they make hardly, if at all, affect the peace and order that generally reign. Another leads the reader to think that the government is insensitive to which, however regrettably, are viewed differently by Washington and Paris. Ambassador Galbraith is an advocate of Washington's views.

That Mr. Huszagh is tossing a partisan brickbat becomes evident in his coach about the north of training. crack about the worth of training that the government has at heart the businessmen to be diplomats. This is citizens. One should not neglect to Having been in business in France consider the context of an economy adversely affected by a world eco-nomic recession that has lowered the price of its raw material exports and increased its energy costs.

Another presents a repressive regime in a distorted description of what is actually happening. As in . many countries, there might be some lapses among the military, but these are very rare exceptions and are promptly corrected and severely punished under our laws. The recent arrests of labor leaders were not meant to terrorize labor; the leaders were being held for inciting rebellion and sedition punishable in accordance with constitutional processes.

BONN - At no time since World War II has Enrope faced such a flood of corporate failures.

Major companies in the beadlines, such as Britain's

Laker Airways, the trans-Atlantie carrier that an-nounced its insolvency in February, and AEG-Telefunken, West Germany's lottering electrical giant, are merely the best known of thousands of companies that have collapsed or are in severe financial straits.

The figures vary by country and business sector, but the trend is clear throughout Europe. In Belgium, corporate failures increased by 15.8 percent last year, and in France, by 20.3 percent. In Britain, insolvencies were up 26.4 percent; in West Germany, 27.4 percent. In the Netherlands, long a place of enviable prosperity, 42 percent more companies failed last year than in the year before.

By all indications, the first half of 1982 brought little respite. In England, Scotland and Wales, the number of insolvent companies increased by 21 per-cent, In West Germany, the number was 50 percent higher, and economists at Dresdner Bank estimated that perhaps 12,600 companies might close down this year, which would be a postwar record.

In France, the number of insolvencies was kept from exceeding last year's high only by government measures to defer the social security payments of financially troubled companies. But the end of a government-imposed price and wage freeze in October is expected to mark a new round of wage increases, and with it a rise in bankruptcies. Financial experts agree that the rash of corporate failures is largely the result of financial strains caused by the prolonged recession and the high cost of bor-

"In the last 10 to 15 years, industry's capital base has been shrinking," observed Gerhard Riedel, elief economist at Frankfurt's Berliner Handels- und Frankfurter Bank. Because of low earnings and a lack of venture capital, he said, companies have relied increasingly on borrowings to survive. At the same time, wages and social costs throughout Europe have climbed relentlessly.

Now, high interest rates make loan service costly, and the recession is squelching sales," be added, "so a lot of companies are going under."

An economist at Amsterdam's Amro Bank agreed.

The recession has stifled consumer spending, he added, driving retail businesses into receivership, while high interest rates on mortgages have crushed the construction industry. ### Bonn Crisis Prompts Share Surge

FRANKFURT — The collapse of the Bonn government coalition led to one of the strongest rallies in several years on the Frankfurt stock exchange Friday, since the middle of May. And dealers said the index, calculated mid-session, missed a second wave of buying orders.

Dealers said the memory of recent lean months was dispelled as investors sensed the approach of a more conservative administration.

The share rally, which started earlier in the week, gained strength after Chancellor Helmut Schmidt called for new elections. His proposal, cast aside by the opposition, coalition partners.

Adding to the stock market cuphoria was a growing hope that the Bundesbank at its council meeting. Thursday may announce a further relaxation of its monetary policy through a reduction of the minimum cash reserves that hanks must keep on deposit.

Some investment analysts said they believe that the rally is unlikely to be sustained, that many professional investors may take advantage of the rise to unload shares they no longer want.

The Frankfurt market largely reversed the weak trend of the last month caused by the severe debt problems of AEG-Telefunken. West Germany's second biggest electronics firm, and concern over other credit failures abroad.

Blue-chip shares rose Friday by as much as 10 Deutsche marks ($4), led by those thought most likely to benefit from a change in government. Auto companies were among the leaders, with shares of swagen adding 9 DM to 145.

One analyst said hopes of a conservative administration could produce higher investment by compa-nies that have held back because of uncertainty over the Schmidt government's economic policy.

Bendix accompanied the an-nouncement with a cash offer for up in 70 percent of Martin Mariet-In stock, causing many investors to purchase Marietta shares. Bendix had previously said that it would pay cash for slightly over 50 per-cent of Marietta's stock.

Marietta vowed to press its own takeover attempt and disclosed that its directors had amended the company's bylaws to provide that written notice of any stockholders meeting must be given at least 30 days before a meeting which pre-sumably would be necessary for Bendix to take control. Marietta said it expects to take control of Bendix "well within that time."

British Inflation Rate Declines to 8 Percent she has done little to fight a sharp

The Associated Press

LONDON — Britain's annual inflation rate, whose recent decline Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's monetarist strategy, has fallen to 8 percent, the lowest in nearly years, the government reported Friday.

In the 12 months ending in August, prices rose by 8 percent, compared with 8.7 percent in the year ending the previous month. The 8percent rate is the lowest since October 1978.

The inflation rate was unchanged in August for the second successive month. The govern-ment's retail price index also showed no increase in average prices during the month.

The 8-percent annual rate com-pares with a peak of 21.9 percent that was recorded a year after Mrs. Thatcher came to office in May 1979. A program of limiting credit and state spending in an effort to light inflation became the lynchpin of her economic policy. To the anger of labor unions the Treasury, predicted that mla-tion will fall to below 7.5 percent by the end of the year. He said that holding prices unthanged for two months in a row was an achievement unparalleled for 13 years. The government hoped the rap-id decline in inflation would bolster its attempts to contain pay settlements. It is locked in disputes with National Health Service workers, who are seeking a 12-percent increase, and coal miners, who want a 30 percent increase. Mrs. Thatcher wants pay raises held below 10 percent.

Britain's inflation rate is now in line with the world average of 8.1 percent and below the European Community average of 10 percent. The government said equivalent annual rates elsewhere are 6.5 percent in the United States, 1.7 percent in the cent in Japan, 16 percent in Italy, 11.9 percent in France and 5.6 percent in West Germany.

The future of trans-Atlantic and opposition parties, however, Japanese Raising Sights Toward Key Role in World Aircraft Industry

By Tracy Dahlby

Washington Post Service TOKYO - After soaring into the wild the yonder with its production of automobiles and electronic gadgetry in the 1970s, Japan is preparing to launch itself into the upper echelons of the world aircraft industry in the 1990s.

With the strong backing of the governtheir technology and gathering up the huge amounts of financing needed for n takeoff into commercial aircraft producareas in which the United States remains

Recently, the Japanese have demon-strated their flair for quality-control workmanship and reliability in making major parts for Boeing's new 767. Now, moving parts for Boeing's new 101. It was some a larger stake in the development of Boeing's next-generation commercial their role as a subcontractor to the world's major aircraft producers.

"We've got the technological ability and the resolve to boost the Japanese aircraft industry into the ranks of the world's most advanced aircraft makers," said Eitaro Murai, managing director of the Society of lapanese Aerospace Companies, an industry umbrella group.

Mr. Murai, like other industry analysts Francisco de la companya del companya de la companya del companya de la companya in Japan, acknowledged that closing the technological gap, while possible, would be costly. But the biggest obstacle, he said, is the absence of a large enough domestic aircraft market to allow the country to build a strong export base as it has done in automobiles and shipbuilding. In 1981, Japan's fledgling aircraft indus-try had $1.3 billion in sales — less than $

percent of global sales. Its growth has been hampered by its heavy reliance on military contracts from Japan's Self-Defense Agency, although the share of defense-related sales shrank from 86 percent of total sales in 1979 to 78 percent last

If all goes according to plan - and Mr. Murai and others concede that is still something of a big "if" - the industry expects commercial aircraft sales to expand to as much as 50 percent of its busioess by the early 1990s and, measured at current prices, to top $5 billion.

For the moment, Japanese amhitions are welded to plans to take part in projects to develop the 150-seat short-haul jetliners now on the drawing boards at Boeing. McDonnell Douglas and Airbus Industrie. All three competitors have courted the Japanese industry for help in developing the next-generation aircraft and offset a sizable part of the estimated $2 billion to 3 billion it will take to get the project air-

Industry analysis and government officials say the Japanese have narrowed the field of potential foreign partners to Boeing, and may reached a broad agreement in talks with the company by the end of the year, if the powerful Ministry of International Trade and Industry has its way.

Virtually National Project

MITI has virtually elevated the 150seater deal to the level of a national project because of what officials view as its long-range implications for the development of new strategic industries that will provide the cutting edge for Japan's technologically sophisticated economy in the years ahead.

"If Japan fails to realize this project," said Akira Yamazaki, assistant director to MITI's aircraft and weapons division, "we will have missed an opportunity to devel-op our technology in the field of large air-craft for the next 20 to 30 years." MITI is exerting strong influence bebind the scenes to organize Japanese aircraft companies for the project. Under its wing, Mitsubishi Heavy Industries,

Kawasaki Heavy Industries and Fuji

Heavy Industries agreed to underwrite 15 percent of the costs in developing Boeing's

the 767, under the terms of the agreement. For the 150-seater, however, the Japanese companies are demanding an expanded role that would involve them in all phases, including design, sales and after-sales servicing. MITI, which is offering substantial government subsidies to parti-cipants in the project, also wants to get apan's giant trading houses into the act ny using their global business network to help develop the sales and marketing ap-paratus for aircraft, which Japan now

Talks are believed to be stuck on Boeing's demand that the Japanese shoulder 30 percent of the cost of developing the oext-generation jetlioer, while the Japanese insist on a stake of 20 to 25 percent. U.S. industry observers in Tokyo also suggested that it may prove difficult to in-clude the Japanese in aircraft sales and servicing because of Boeiog's dominance in those areas.

Spreading Financial Risks

In a bid to spread the financial risks more evenly among a large number of key companies, MITI has asked Nissan, Jagan's No. 2 automaker, to narticinate in the venture. Nissan said last week that it had entered a broad tie-up agreement with which now pursue aircraft production Martin Marietta of the United States to only as a sideline, is largely restricted to obtain basic technology for the develop-the company's plans. Major U.S. aircraft makers are not worried about Japan emerging as a serious rival anytime soon. But Willard A. "If government and in-dustry were to make the commitment, I see no reason why they couldn't develop a competitive industry just as they have done in other fields."

cials declined, however, to elaborate on

Reflecting the widely accepted view in the industry in Japan that participation with foreign partners is the key step, a group of three Japanese companies launched a joint project three years ago with Rolls-Royce of Britain for the development of a fuel-saving, low-noise jet engine designed for use in a next-generation passenger jet of the 150-seater type.

In another international tie-up, Kawasaki Heavy Industries is putting the finishing touches on a multipurpose helicopter in collaboration with Messerschmitt-Bolkow-Blohm of West Germany.

LOS ANGELES - Pan American World Airways will carry out major new cost-cutting measures, including the reduction of its work force by 5,000 employees, in a bid to save between $500 million and $600 million annually and return to profitability next year, according to C. Edward Acker, chairman and chief executive.

Despite lower-than-expected passenger traffic, Mr. Acker said Thursday, Pan Am's survival is not in doubt, in part because it expects to more than triple its cash reserves within 60 days and halve its long-term debt by the middle of next year. "We will absolutely be in the black in 1983," Mr. Acker said.

NEW YORK - International Business Machines Corp. is waging a war, using its own security force, in an effort to keep competitors from exploiting IBM technology.

A bombshell in that war was exploded Tuesday when the comput-er giant decided to dismiss and sue three executives on charges of stealing corporate secrets.

According to IBM, the three ex-ecutives, including two senior engiocers involved in designing IBM's personal computer, had formed a company, Bridge Technology Inc., to market products or designs for products that could be attached to the personal computer to enhance its performance.

IBM, in announcing the suit, said it had gathered its evidence with the help of the president of a Cleveland computer company who pretended to negotiate with the employees while secretly taping his conversations with them.

Europe Sees Little Respite From Flood of Failing Firms (Continued from Page 7) Spinnerei, a maker of yarns, filed bankruptcy suits this year. Britain gloomy economie environoffers a host of examples: Jane Eyre Ltd., a textile manufacturer; Madam Butterfly Ltd., a dressmaker, and Clive Shilton Ltd., a maker of women's hand-

shops, on borrowed money. Toment is forcing many to close.

Analysts disagree, however, on the potential long-term effects of the upheaval. Some view it as a process of natural selection that dations. will assure leaner, more competitive industries. Others fear that the financial bloodletting and the unemployment it causes might lessen the ability of surviving companies to rehound.

Bankers say the problems of AEG, which filed for receivership and electronics products, optical goods, and automotive and other last month, reflect the financial difficulties of smaller companies. Expansion costs in recent years cut sharply into AEG's capital base, and lagging profits forced a reli-ance on bank loans that led to a debt burden of $2.2 billion. But other factors are contributing to the insolvencies. European industry is undergoing profound structural shifts caused mainly by an influx in recent years of lowerpriced products from low-wage countries closer to the sources of raw materials and energy.

"Many companies are disappearing simply because the markets they serve are saturated, or because cheap overseas manufacturers now supply the mass staple goods they once made," a Frankurt bank economist said. Foreign competition has deci-mated Europe's textile industry. West Germany's Van Delden, a

THOMAS E. DEWEY AND HIS TIMES By Richard Norton Smith. 703 pp. $22,50.

Simon & Schuster, 1230 Ave. of the Americas, New York, N.Y. 10020.

Reviewed by Maurice Carroll

To BE a winner in politics, you should plan to be born at the right time. Then you come of elective age at a time when the field is not crowded with heavyweights.
It looked as if Thomas E. Dewey would be one of the lucky ones. As district attorney of Manhattan when the city's newspapers were frisky and fascinated with the colorful criminals he was locking up, he won an early and impressive reputation. As gover-nor of New York when his display of executive talent contrasted with the chaos of wartime Washington, he was the perfect Republican alternative to a tiring Democratic administration.

And he was in his 40s, vigorous, successful, smart and tough, when the time came. But as everyone knows, he was doubly uniucky.

Who realized that the immensely popular Franklin D. Roosevelt, having already broken the precedent begun by George Washington and run for a third term, would, even though old and ill, run for a fourth? Who suspected that the scorned Harry S. Truman would turn out to be a ferociously successful campaigner and (some of us think) a most effec-So Dewey twice failed to win the presidency. A commanding political presence in his lifetime he will be among history's footnotes. School-children will puzzle: What was the name of the man who lost to Roose-

Craused with Apecdotes

Many, including Richard Norton Smith, author of this good — al-though sloppily edited — biography, think Dewey deserved better. But the relentlessly researched book is crammed with anecdotes that suggest why he probably got just about what

There was a motorcade through New York City in which Dewey first annoyed his presidential candidate, Dwight D. Eisenhower, with a fussy torrent of instructions on how to behave at each stop. Then the governor turned to an aide and asked about

It had been canceled, the man replied. Dewey asked if the decision had been made at the Commodore Hotel campaign headquarters. Actually, the local party leader explained, a slip-up had occurred, and field organizers had made the decision on their own. Dewey exploded, demanding to know on whose authority such an order had been given and why the original schedule had not been adhered to strictly.

"After five minutes of this, an embarrassed Eisenhower turned and whispered into [Bernard] Shanley's ear, 'Jesus Christ, no wonder he was never elected president.'"

Even as a loser, Dewey is credited by Smith - this is the subtitle of the book - as "maker of the modern Republican Party." That seems a trifle cosmic. It was no longer the party of Robert A. Taft when Dewey left, but it has become the party of Ronald Reagan, and many would measure Taft as the more liberal. Were the Eisenhower years samply an interruption in a continuing antigovernment mood among Republicans?

Personally, I found the Dewey view of government and politics attractive, as Smith summarizes a series of lectures Dewey gave at Princeton in Politically, he dismissed "impractical theorists" who would divide voters ideologically between the parties. "Evcrything would be neatly arranged," said Dewey. "The results would be neatly arranged, too. The Republicans would lose every election, and the Democrats would win."

Governmentally, he spoke like the boy who had been brought up in Owosso, Mich, in the first decade of the century. It struck a responsive chord for me. In a little town in New Jersey, reading the turn-of-the century boys' books stacked in my grandfa-ther's attic — Horatio Alger, of course, the Rover Boys, the Boys of Columbia High — it was possible to get a feel of the independence, the localism, that characterized the small-town America of Dewey's childhood. That was the platform from which he Whatever his personal coldness, Dewey's view of what government should do was burnane and broad. He expanded Albany's role. But he did it prudently, building a fund in the wartime years, for instance, that left his state in healthy shape for postwar readjustment.

This book is one of a number of good stories that have come out in recent years about politicians who fell short of the absolute top but who still mattered. Journalism students are told that it is narrative -- lots of action, lots of anecdote - that holds a reader, and Smith offers it liberally.

He also offers it with too frequent lapses into cliche. Why must the newsboys who shouted the headlines about racketeers be "apple-cheeked"? Why must upstate hamlets be "white-

And why should a book about a man who was so meticulous about detail be flawed by such carcless editing? The Tammany leader Richard Croker gains an "a" and becomes "Croaker." The New Jersey Republican Bernard Shanley is rebaptized Bertrand." Harry O'Donnell, the best political press agent I have ever met, is quoted in the book but left out of the index.

Stuff like that should not happen. But - overall - Dewey is luckier in his biographer than he was with the nation's voters. This is an admiring, respectful, readable story.

He has won 12 of 13 decisions since May 10 and Thursday night's triumph was the 262d of his career. After Dave Winfield hit his 35th homer in the second inning the Yankees never again threatened Palmer (14-4). Baltimore scored two runs in the first inning off Dave Righerti (9-9), and that was all Palmer needed. Afterward, Palmer departed from his accustomed silence "Our bullpen was kind of thin tonight, so it was good to go nine imings," he said. "Normally, it's not a smart thing to do, but there are exceptions."

Referring to the Oriole manager, Earl Weaver, he added, "I can see

BASEBALL ROUNDUP

Earl's reasoning for leaving me in. On the other hand, there's no denying that the innings take their toll, and so does 142 pitches." Last Sunday in Cleveland, Palmer left a scoreless game after seven innings, claiming that he was in pain. Since then, there has been criticism from fans and the media in Baltimore, centering on the right-hander's history of asking for late-inning relief.

In response, Palmer said, "I know what I'm doing. I know how I feel. In Cleveland, the bullpen was rested and my back hurt. I took myself out. Tonight, the bullpen was tired and I stayed in. People don't realize things like that. I'm trying to help the team win the most games, and I'm trying to take care of myself, too." The Orioles, who scored come-from-behind victories in the first four games of the series with the Yankees, led from the start Thursday night. They took a 2-0 lead in the first inning on run-scoring sin-gles by Eddie Murray and Gary Roenicke. Murray also singled in the sixth and scored an uncarned run on a two-out throwing error by Andre Robertson, the shortstop.

In Box 18, Upper Deck, One American Dream Is Fulfilled

By Alison Muscatine

WASHINGTON - Five days after my 28th birthday, I fulfilled a lifelong dream. It happened during a visit bome to Cali-fornia, during one of my family's annual nies of summer. It turned out to be the high point of my vacation.

Every year since my childhood, my family has gone to see the San Francisco Giants play baseball in Candlestick Park, Every 110 Start fear, we buy beer and hot dogs and a Giant brogram. Every year, my dad buys peannts, every year, I consider buying a Giant cap 200 III put, now that my brother and I are adults, I laways decide against it. Every year, on the lay we go to the ball game, the Giants win.

and his never before, in all the years we have to condition of the period of the perio

The Lineup

The second We were sitting in an upper-deck box on the state of the third-base line. My father, on my left, in was berating the first baseman for his slopby play and praising the definess of the man the pentrating on the batter. I had just reviewed he program, trying to find one Giant whose same I recognized. My older brother — who aught me how to "throw like a boy" when I was a kid — and his wife had to cancel at he last ministe and weren't there.

ot dogs and watching the Giants take a nick 2-0 lead over the Pittsburgh Pirates. Unfortunately, the precise details of the next moment, ones I normally might remember (the count, how many men were out, who was on base, etc.) have been obscured by the excitement of what followed.

All I know is that Reggie Smith, the lefthanded first baseman for the Giants, came to the plate, that Pirate pitcher Don Robinson threw a pitch, that Smith swung and that, then — CRACK — Smith hit a foul ball, high, very high, up toward the upper-deck stands along the third-base line. I saw it coming. It was coming right to me, my mother, and my father. I was amazed because, believe me, it wasn't one of these foul balls that looks like it's coming straight at you and then, at the last second. ends up landing 200 feet away. This foul ball was coming right to us, and there was no doubt about it.

In fact, this baseball, spinning furiously and traveling at an incredibly rapid rate off Reggie Smith's bat, was coming right toward my mother's head.

"Duck, Mom!" I yelled as we watched the ball, spinning to the right, grow larger and larger. I stood up, reaching out as far as I could with my right arm. Within a split-second ... SMACK! A major league baseball was dead center in my palm. My hand, trained by hours of playing "pitch and catch" and "running bases" with my brother, wrapped around the ball. Had I caught it? I bobbled it momentarily,

I couldn't believe it. After 28 years, I caught a foul ball at Candlestick Park.

I examined it carefully. It was the real thing. A leather hardball, made by Rawlings in Haiti (Haiti?), with a "cushioned cork center." And red thread in the seams. And a smudge of the Candlestick Park infield on

Printed on the ball was: OFFICIAL BALL NATIONAL LEAGUE, and then the signature of Charles S. Feeney, PRES. (This is a name all old Giant fans recognize, because "Chub" Feeney was once vice president of the Giant organization). On the other side, beneath "cushioned cork center." were the letters RO-N. I had no idea what

As I scrutinized every detail of the ball Reggie Smith hit to me, I realized that nearby fans were applauding my one-handed stab in Box 18 of the upper deck. Then a man came over and pointed to a large crowd of people behind us.

A Compromise "They'd like you to stand up and take a bow for them." At first I thought it was a joke. I harked back to my days as "the girl who could throw, bat and field better than any of the boys" and thought to myself, cynically: They're just impressed because a girl caught the ball. But I wanted to be polite, so I compromised. I stood and held the ball up toward the group requesting a bow. They applauded again.

For the next seven innings, I guarded my ball jealously (particularly when, moments after my catch, a group of prepubescent boys took over the row of seals directly behind us). I thought about all those games my family had gone to when my brother and I

I remembered how we would stand up in anticipation, gloves outstretched, every time a pitch was fouled off, even if it was hit down the opposite baseline. And I remembered how back then, my brother, father, mother and I knew all the players and their numbers — the greats like Willie Mays (24), Willie McCovey (44), Juan Marichal (27), Orlando Cepeda (41), Felipe Alou (23), Jim-my Davenport (12) and Jim Ray Hart (14), (Besides learning to "throw like a boy," also spent many hours of my childhood memorizing the Giants' batting averages.) And I remembered the thrill of waiting outside the Giants' locker room asking for player's antographs. (I got Willie Mays's on opening day in 1964, and later I got Jesus Alou's, Hal Lanier's and McCovey's.) And I reflected how, since growing up, we had given up so many of those traditions for our childhood: for years, my brother and I have gone to the games barehanded, and no one in my family knows the lineup any ore, let alone the players' batting averages. But I realized later that none of that takes away from the thrill of catching a foul ball. After the game was over (the Giants, in keeping with our family tradition, won 4-2 and broke a six-game losing streak), my par-ents and I met my brother and his wife for dinner in San Francisco. "Guess what?" my father announced as he greeted them. "Your sister had fulfilled a lifelong dream."

Apprised of my feat, my brother, stunned, asked to inspect the ball. He stared at it for a moment, cradling it in his hand.
"I wonder where I would have been sitting," he said, looking toward me, smiling.

3 Teams Lead NFL's Hurt Parade As Another Rough Sunday Looms

By William N. Wallace

NEW YORK — Testifying in a eccent court case, Dr. Marvin Knight, the Dallas Cowboys' long-time physician, said that every football player he had known had at one time or another been in-jured. The annual toll began last Sunday with the opening of the National Football League season. The teams hurt the most were the Cleveland Browns, the Kansas City Chiefs and the New Orleans Saints because Clay Matthews, Jack Rudnay and George Rogers are so good and so difficult to re-

One of George's loyal supporters admits Bush has a recognition problem, and that it is impossible to keep his name in the public eye. "But," he told me, "he won't be the first vice president of the United States we will have to bring back from obscurity.

Does George think Reagan will run again?" I asked. George doesn't know, and he would be the last person to ask the

"Maybe that's why no one ever hears from him," I said. "But that must put you in a spot. You can't very well get an organization together by 1984 without tipping George's band that he has presidential ambitions."

The Bush man said, "It is a Catch-22 situation. If I try to raise money for Bush now, people will get the impression George has gotten the word that Reagan won't run again. But if I say George hasn't got the word, no one will give me any money."

The Difficulty of Keeping a Straight Face Susan Sarandon And Other Perils of the Movie Business

L ONDON — They've been shooting a film here which stars Catherine Deneuve as a She gives the impression, aided

4,000-year-old who drops her lover, a younger man of only 300 played by David Bowie, in favor of a woman doctor who specializes in the problems of aging. The film is called "The Hunger." It is a first directorial effort by Tony Scott, brother of Ridley ("Alien") Scott, and the woman doctor is played by the American actress Susan Sarandon. Filming, Sarandon says, has been fraught with moments when it is hard as the dickens to keep a straight face.

"The first rule when you're doing a gothic horror romance is you have to believe it or the audience won't," she said in her makeshift dressing room in a Mayfair mansion. She was wearing cotton trousers, a T-shirt and close-cropped orange hair. "But there are moments of tongue in cheek - you have to leave spaces for the audience to laugh or they'll laugh at the wrong

Sarandon, who is very busy these days, can currently be seen in Paul Mazursky's "Tempest," which she has described as a Jewish midlife-crisis version of Shakespeare (she plays Ariel, whom Mazursky has transformed into a New Jersey chantoosie). After "The Hunger" she moves on to "The Buddy System" with Richard Dreyfuss, which she calls a romantic comedy about ordinary people. Last winter she was nominated for an Oscar for playing the waitress in Louis Malle's "Atlantic City," an event so unexpected that she didn't even manage to vote for herself. Thanks mostly to ber work with Malle (she also starred in his "Pretty Baby"), Sarandon has be-come a leading lady after 12 years in films.

"I started out with a lot of girls who have disappeared — Kim Darby, Mia Farrow, Karen Black, Susan Blakely," she said, Sometimes the film itself nearly disappears: her two biggest successes, "Atlantic City" and "The Rocky Horror Picture Show, "almost didn't get released.

by a flat voice and distant gaze, of someone who is disillusioned despite finally having made the hig time. "I've been an actor since 1970," she says. "I'm just very practical about it."

The big time is, in any case, an ambiguous place to be. "Leading roles for women are less interesting than supporting roles because the leading lady is always waiting for something to happen to the leading man.

"The problem when you get to a certain point in your career is that directors either want the big stars or they want to discover someone new — there's a bit of ego there. I'm not Barbara Streisand or Clint Eastwood. It's difficult if you're in the middle -I don't know where I am."

She is active in politics, but only, she says, in self-defense.
"Issues like the First Amendment and nuclear war threaten me personally so I'm involved." She appears in the New York theater as often as she can (her plays in-clude "An Evening with Richard Nixon" and "A Couple of White Chicks Sitting Around Talking") and her first big acting job was in everything you can while making it. Anything else is bonus."

Apart," in which she says she played the girl everything happens to. In New York she helped found an acting group called the Im-prov which is less fun now than it was when everyone was bold and raw. "Once you've developed your bag of tricks there's no danger in what you can do any longer. What everyone looks for in life is some kind of controlled fol-

She found something close to that by working with the Imagi-nation Workshop for schizo-phrenics at New York's Mount Sinai Hospital.

"It started about five years ago. I beard about it at Christmas and I was having a hard time get-ting through Christmas so I thought I would read The Night Before Christmas' in a children's ward. It was very self-indulgent." Instead, she found herself replacing an absent schizophrenie in an improvised play. "I was a in an improvised play. "I was a kind of a guest artist," she says. When in New York she works with the group twice a week, two sessions a day. "We use the same technique as the Improv," she says. "You're working with more fragile people. They aren't necessarily crazier than actors.

"You never know what to expect. Their reality, and they supposedly have trouble with their fix on reality, is so much more real than ours when acting. It makes acting feel like nothing." But it also helps acting. "I am an actor and anything that happens in my life is fodder to anything I

She co-produced and appeared in "The Last of the Cowboys" with Henry Fonda, but producing does not attract her. "As an actor you have to be protected and keep your bubble up. You can't do that when you're dealing with teamsters and accountants." She hasn't the patience for directing. Acting is the main attraction: even if any sensible actor knows he or she is just part of a package these days, there are mysteries too.

She tells the story of Laurence Olivier coming offstage after a sublime performance, auxious and depressed. Everyone clustered around to soothe him and say had been perfect. "I know," he cried. "But why?" "I don't think it's something you ever figure out," Sarandon says. Acting, she feels, can never be completely fulfilling. "That," she says, "is what is so seductive about it."

The 22-year-old Andrew, a helicopter pilot, told reporters the 74-day campaign was "an experience I wouldn't have missed." Queen Elizabeth, accompanied by her lust and Prince Philip, and daughter, Princess Anne, went out to the carrier by royal barge for a 10-minute private reunion in the admiral's cabin with Andrew as the Invincible moved into its berth at the Portsmouth naval base after 166 days at sea. An estimated 15,000 people lining the harbor cheered the arrival of the carrier.

PEOPLE 2-Handed Fleisher Cheered

Leon Fleisber, 54, stricken in 1964 with an ailment that partially crippled his right hand, won a standing ovation at the inaugural concert of Joseph Meyerhoff Symphony Hall in Baltimore after playing Franck's Symphonic Variations with the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra conducted by Sergin Comissiona. Fleisher last played publicly with two hands in 1965. He has undergone years of rehabilitation. Before Thursday night, Fleisher, a member of the piano faculty at Baltimore's Per Conservatory, played several con-certs for the left hand.

Sheikh Mohammed al-Fassi, the Saudi Arabian billionaire who has been doling out large sums of money around the United States, won't give New York $200,000 because Mayor Edward Koch didn't greet him or provide security for his entourage. The sheikh's spokes-man said the sheikh changed his mind because Koch did not have the "common courtesy" to provide any security for two members of his entourage who arrived at a ... or spoke with a lawyer for the sheith, but did not meet him. The mayor said that he does not meet with people just because they're rich, but if someome does some-thing nice for the city, he would be happy to meet them and thank them." In Florida and Virginia, the sheikh's gifts to organizations carned into more bad publicity. Al-Fassi stopped off Wednesday in Oriando, where he had intended to donate $80,000 to the Tom Skinner Club, a Christian youth organization. But when he learned the local newspaper had criticized him in an editorial, he tore up the check and threatened to leave town. Mayor Bill Frederick said. After further consultation with his aides and a motorcade ride to City Hall, the sheigh finally gave the Skinner Chib $20,000 and donated $15,000 to two city projects. Al-Fassi did not face much better in Norfolk, where he made a stop to drop off $30,000. On arrival at Norfolk International Airport, al-Fassi demanded a police escort with sirens and flashing lights. City officials refused, but after the sheikh had sat in his charter plane
